BALTIMORE — The Register of the Maryland State Archives, a historical newspaper from the 19th century, recently announced the completion of digitization of the Maryland State Archives. "The Archives has received an unprecedented level of interest since receiving the 2007 Richard J. Starkey Award from The Association for Public History," said Rosemary N. Wilmot, special collections manager. "The Starkey Award is given for outstanding project to document the public history collections of an archival institution. It includes the development and completion of a website to make the archival holdings available to the public. The State Archives also received a Preservation Fellowship Award in 2008 from the Maryland Historical Trust. The project was funded by the Maryland State Archives as a demonstration project to complete the first step of this project. The multimedia project will be used by all divisions of the Archives, as well as the public. "The Archives' History Research Center has completed the production of a DVD on the history of the Chesapeake Region," said Wilmot. "As of this time, more than 19,000 items have been digitized and more than 1,200 hours of video have been created. In addition, the K-12 Center 3e33713323
