Hassan bin Hamad Al Thani, emir of Qatar, attends the seventh World Economic Forum on Africa in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, January 27, 2018. REUTERS/Thierry Gouegnon Hassan bin Hamad al-Thani, who is close to U.S. President Donald Trump, said the news outlets had deviated from their news reports to "harm the state and sever it from the region". Speaking in Washington on Monday, bin Hamad cited remarks made by Gulf Arab states, notably Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates and Bahrain, over the oil price, Iran and Qatar. The U.S. State Department said it was aware of bin Hamad's comments and welcomed the closure. "The United States calls on all Gulf states to work towards a unified, inclusive and resilient GCC (Gulf Cooperation Council) that does not undermine unity and stability in the region," a U.S. State Department spokesman told Reuters. Saudi Arabia, the UAE and Bahrain cut ties with Qatar over what they say is Doha's support of extremism, and closed their borders. Qatar has repeatedly said it is not paying for extremism and called the accusations against it baseless. Bin Hamad said on Monday, "Qatari media outlets have deviated from their news reports to harm the state and sever it from the region." He did not name the outlets. His remarks come after Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, the UAE, and Egypt severed diplomatic ties with Qatar and closed off all land, air and sea links with the small Gulf Arab state, which is home to the world's largest expatriate population. Bin Hamad said the Qatar News Agency was not taking part in the closure of news
