Hit the ball with precision and get ready to compete with the best players in the country. 41 likes A little bit of an update. Now you can actually play the game. There were a few bug fixes and what not but i wanted to get the first version out the door. So, if you haven't already downloaded it, please do so. I've also got some goals I want to achieve with this project, one of which is to make the game run faster, so I'd appreciate your support in spreading the word about it. 112 likes A little game I've been slacking off on developing and trying to get a few simple audio glitches and bugs sorted out. While the original concept was to turn it into a top-down RPG similar to Diablo, that has since been shelved. Also, I couldn't quite work out how to get the camera to work properly, so with the help of Tass, we decided to make it a first-person dungeon crawler. The initial goal was a 2D RPG, but to be honest, with no programmer to hand, I didn't think it was actually possible. So, as Tass would put it, there's no reason to be prissy about it. 106 likes A little game I've been slacking off on developing and trying to get a few simple audio glitches and bugs sorted out. //----- //===== The Basics ===== //===== //Pitch the ball in the air with the mouse and strike //it with your racket to return //If you are holding down the "CTRL" key, //you will use the up and down movements of your //mouse to control your player's movement. //The "WASD" keys are for movement //Press "ESC" to quit or "F" to pause When you are going for a kickflip try not to leave the block, start on a harder kickflip by creating a hook or step up (not pretty but with a lot of line speed) than when you do it, your hand and just the slightest part of the foot that touches the rail where you were crouching just before your head hit the pole will catch it, giving you a big air but if not you won't go so much so you could still try a kickflip as you think you won't be able to do so if you try one right before a jump it works better, another tip is to practice on a soft rail, that way you can check out how fast you can go, adding speed, also try going from ground to a nice vertical jump in a air or a flip. Also use "normal" flips rather than having a ton of twists and spins, while spinning is also good use you can't pull off a lot of spins without some degree of falling, which is very bad for your score, so try to control it better. Also don't turn your back when you're at the edge of the block and wave, just facing the tip to the side of the pole, then get yourself into a nice air or kickflip, but also watch out because there will be times you can make a mistake and the block and tip will come crashing down on you, especially at lower heights Quitting before hitting a hard kickflip is pretty common so try not to do that, and trying to get someone to push you off the rail for a little while is also not a bad idea, it gives you just enough time to know whether it's going to go or not. Even if you know you'll jump hard or the block is high up try to do it slowly, especially if you're trying to do a 720. There are two types of obstacles, one you get a "warning" and one you get a "bump" when the block is ready to

: South Africa opens new chapter for international tennis Wimbledon-bound South Africa enters its first Davis Cup in history in the Netherlands from August 16-22 In 2005, when in the formative stages of its international history, the situation for tennis was different for South Africa. It was a nonentity on the international tennis scene. Now, going into its first Davis Cup, 2014 does not look very different. Having first hosted the event in 2004, South Africa ultimately lost both its singles and doubles matches in the final group stage. So looking ahead to 2014, South Africa's first-ever appearance as an independent participant in the Davis Cup is an event many here have been preparing for on and off since the October 2006 staging of the ITF's annual South African Open in Johannesburg. Many players from overseas have either driven through the country's very limited international scene, or in South Africa's case, all but ignored it, preferring to focus on their own country's domestic competitions and training early each year by January. Among those more focused on the domestic scene was 2014 world No. 240 Zagreb-raised Roger Wombwell. However, when ranked 24th in doubles at the time, Wombwell was nervous about where he would be seeded at his first ever Davis Cup and January's South African Open. Looking back, Wombwell admits he was "over-ambitious" in his pre-event thinking and now recognises the opportunity he had not even seen under a tournament cordon before to play tennis. "I think 2010 was the first time I met all these guys. The box was almost like the home base of their international team. It's crazy to think they're travelling the world, playing matches, progressing, qualifying for championships and here you are as an amateur in a lesser-ranked event in South Africa thinking: 'We should be able to win this.' "That was my initial thought, going to South Africa as a first time, playing with these guys," said Wombwell on an Australia Open practise session. To help with the transition to an international scene, Wombwell and Blackpool-based Martin Riggs'-born and bred Johannesburg-returning compatriot Rory Bryan are conducting camps at Centurion to work with domestic pros and club players (who come with eligibility for each other-based discounts
