Yakan FACT SHEET The Yakan (also Yakana, Yakaan, Yaqan, Jaksana, Jaksana, Yakkana) were the second riverine civilisation to be discovered in South East Asia. An area of some 1.5 million square miles, it was displaced by the expansion of two Austroasiatic-speaking peoples, the Rai (the Mon) and the Ngaju (the Dyaks), into eastern peninsular Malaya in the 14th century. The Yakan language is extinct, and only two names are recorded: the Mon of Pahang, and the Dyak of Sarawak. The latter has been confused with Yakan; the former can be identified as the one in the Mongolian script, although this is contested by some academics. It is likely that the Dyak was derived from a Javanese ruling class, as the Dyak contact with Java and Sumatra occurs in the ninth century, and the Javanese dynasties began in that century. After the expansion of the Dyak-speaking population and the conquest of the Yakan, the latter became the first trading town in Borneo. They were displaced by the invasion of the Mon
