The Conklin Cinema is also known as the Cinema 675 that is sold as a movie projector. Shoe-Changelt is known to use extracorporeal devices in the treatment of patients. Examples of such extracorporeal devices are devices for extracorporeal blood processing, including hemodialyzers, hemofilters, apheresis devices and such devices as are described in PCT/EP02/01557, which is incorporated herein by reference in its entirety. An example of such an extracorporeal blood processing device is the compact CARDIORESPONSE™ blood processing system, which is commercially available from Haemonetics Corporation, Braintree, Mass. This blood processing system uses a disposable cartridge, the maximum extracorporeal blood flow (ECFBF) being determined by the surface area and flow rate of the cartridge. In order to be able to establish a minimum hematocrit during a blood purification process, the volume of the extracorporeal blood loop may be the same in the cartridge as in the blood inlet of the system. As a result, the overall blood flow (blood flow during the complete extracorporeal blood purification process) in the cartridge is in a range of about 1.5 liters/minute, while the flow is only about 0.8 liters/minute in the blood inlet. In other words, the total blood flow in the cartridge at a temperature of about 36° C. is about one quarter of the total blood flow in the blood inlet of the blood processing system. The low blood flow means a low shear rate in the cartridge, which means that turbulence in the blood will be higher than in the blood inlet. It is further known that replacing whole blood by a red cell substitute in such extracorporeal blood purification processes, i.e. by a process wherein the red blood cells are replaced by an artificial blood component, such as by a process wherein hemoglobin is replaced by a hemoglobin-containing compound, such as by a polymer, typically not only reduces hematocrit but also reduces oxygen delivery to the patient. This reduction of oxygen delivery, in turn, induces a reduction of metabolic activity in the patient and thus a reduction of cardiac work. Since the heart needs to do work in order to pump the
